England shows good taste in desiring to get this choice fruit. But she must not want too much of it.

The Neighbor Women Take the Law in Their Own Hands.

Indignant House Wives Proceed to His Residence Where They Cornered, Flogged and Strapped Him Down-He Resists and then Cries for Mercy.

HAZLETON, Pa., Nov. 26 .- John Quinty, better known as Jockey, is the name of a Honeybrook resident. Quinty; with his wife and two children, occupy a comfortable cottage, and although he worked steadily and seemed to support his family, it was a well-known fact that Quinty frequently drank to excess, and while in such a condition be seemed to delight in abusing and maltreating his wife. The neighbors were frequently called upon to intercede in behalf of the womand children. On more than one occasion Quinty has been the recipient of anonymous threats, advising him to desist from his nefarious practices and cruelty toward his family. The threats, however, had no effect on him, and he continued to amuse himself with increased severity. Thursday Quinty returned home loaded with an unusually heavy jag, and forthwith opened hostilities with his innocent wife. After throwing all his furniture into the street he procured a heavy halter strap and proceeded to belabor his wife in an unmerciful manner.

The woman's cries for help attracted the neighbors' attention, and as the entire male portion of the village were at work, their wives and daughters, after holding an impromptu meeting, resolved to attack the inhuman husband. Headed by Mrs. Jane Hagerty and Mrs. Rose Washington, the indignant women proceeded to the Quinty residence, and although the brutal villain desperately resisted their interference, he was quickly overpowered. The strap which be held was taken possession of by the invaders and applied to the wretch with vigor. Weapons of every description were used, and the man at last cried for quarter. He was shown none, and finally fell ex-hausted. He was then tied with ropes and thrown into a vacant house to await the arrival of the men who had not returned from work.

Their approval of their wives course when they did return was unanimous. Quinty was released, but given to understand that should be recur to his old habits tar and feathers would be in readiness for the next onslaught.

Washington, Nov. 26.—There is no likelihood of the anti-option bill being passed in this congress, and very little, if any, chance for it in the Fifty-third congress. It is to be shelved. One of the plans of the opponents of the bill is to have an investigating committee appointed at the coming session to investpointed at the coming session to investigate the effects of grain and cotton speculations. The object of this move is said to be to cause delay and prevent the consideration of the bill this session. They claim that public sentiment is rapidly changing regard-ing this measure, and that there is no longer the popular clamor for it that was observed prior to the great debate in the senate last summer. The opposition to the bill is well organized, and it is evident that they will leave no stone unturned in the effort to defeat the measure not only in this but future
